

Curriculum at a Glance
American History 300
Grade 11

This course emphasizes such important concepts as the development of democratic institutions, industrialization, urbanization, territorial expansion, and reform. In addition to political and economic influences, social and cultural factors are treated: the role of women; minorities; immigration; and the implications of major movements in art and music. Students will read and write extensively. Close reading of texts including primary and secondary sources is required. Emphasis will be on developing levels of abstract thinking with particular attention to synthesizing material from various aspects of American culture. In addition to classroom assessments (e.g. short essays, quizzes, unit tests, and projects), there will also be a major project that includes a significant piece of research and analysis per quarter.
